The War Cloud in Europe.

LONDON, August 31.—The Manchester Guardian's Dulcino correspondent says: "Albanian recruits are arriving here daily in small numbers. There are about 2,500 now here. The Miridites and highland allied clans adhere to their determination to hold aloof. The Mohammedan leaders of the present movement await the eventual necessity of the yielding of Europe, but say that the Albanian honor requires a public demonstration that they do not yield to Montenegrins. It is difficult to predict the course of events. The Turkish officers openly encourage resistance. Riza Pacha has 13 batteries at his disposal, but according to he symptoms at Dulcino and Scutari the orte has no real intention of forcing a ettlement. If it had it would scarcely permit the continued Albanian concentraon on the Montenegrin frontier. It seems certain that not only a naval demenstration will be necessary, but that the European troops must be landed to effect a settlement."

JUDGE BUXTON AS JUDGE.

There is no more worthy object of eulogy than the man who worthily fills a judicial station. The station is the legitimate goal for the ambition of professional men. It presents a wide sphere for the exertion of learning, ability, and high moral qualifications. To a rightly constituted mind there can be no more congenial occupation than the dispensing of justice. In the business of life nowhere does merit meet with more certain appreciation. I high qualities as a judge have been exhibited on a narrow theatre by any man, the press, the professional tradition, traditions among the people, preserve his memory at least for a generation or two. If that theatre have been a wide and commanding one, his praise finds a proportionate audience. Not only his own, but aftertimes dwell with pleasure upon the tribute called forth by his career.

The position of a judge in North Carolina possesses especial attractions. The people here are essentially a law-abiding people, and this feeling of reverence for the law is extended to those who dispense it. The manly deference which our people pay to one who is at the same time a good judge and a good man, is the very expression of that homage which should be rendered to a high public functionary by a free people.

The external circumstances attending this station are singularly propitious for the cultivation and exertion of the qualifications it demands. The judge is lifted high above the ordinary currents which agitate society; he is far removed from the pursuits and rivalries which awaken strife among men. He is looked upon as the guardian-as it were-of men's dearest rights. Everything conduces to sustain him in the line of his high dutya sense of what is due to his station: of what is due to himself; above all, a sense of what is due to his fellow-men. The difficulty seems to be not how to go right, at least in intent, but how to go wrong. Perverted, indeed, must be that nature which could abuse an office so honorable to the prejudice of any man; and evil and perfidious must be the nature which could withhold a just right from one who should appeal to him in his capacity of judge. In proportion to our admiration of the just judge, should be our condemnation of him who desecrates the office by wrong.

In the dark days of 1870, when in defiance of all law and of every feeling of humanity, aged men of spotless character -men, the pillars of their respective churches-were seized by a band of banditti, dragged from their homes and families, and thrust into a crowded prison during the sweltering heats of Summer; when the suffering and infirmities of age in its most revered form-age which had been reached after a life spent in the practice of every Christian virtue-were daily made the butt of the scoffs and gibes of brutal ruffians; when with enfeebled frames, men were pining under the distress of mind engendered by the contemplation of the ignoble fate which threatened them; application was made in their behalf to Buxton, then one of the Circuit Judges. for the writ of habeas corpus. This writ is the great remedy for delivering a person from unjust imprisonment. It exists among English-speaking people, and exists nowhere else. Among no other people does an adequate remedy exist for an invasion of individual freedom. In all the vast heritage of political wisdom derived from our English ancestors, there is nothing more valued than this. It is the inalienable right of every human being within the limits of the State. It is so declared by the Constitution. It is so declared by the Habeas Corpus Act. Its sanctity has been enforced by every juridical writer, by every Judge wherever the common law prevails, and by our own Judges down to the Radical revolution. But this writ, in defiance of the Constitution, of the law, of every sentiment of humanity towards those who were thus wronged, and of his own solemn oath. Judge BUXTON refused.

It would have been natural to suppose that a man who had disregarded the duties of his high position—who had been instrumental in breaking down that barrier of respect and honor which amongst us as a people has always hedged around the judicial station -who had repaid our people for the honors heaped upon him by a denial of their most sacred right-would, in a day when constitutional rights are the rallying cry of good men, have been content to shelter himself from public condemnation in a quiet station. But his experiments upon the public patience have only served to embolden him.

To-day this man is before the people urging his pretensions to the highest office in their gift. Is it upon the ground that he did his best to murder the liberties of our people? Annul the habeas corpus and liberty is gone. What grosser arrogance on the part of the man himselfwhat profounder contempt towards us as a people could be expressed than is expressed in his attitude towards us? "True." he says in act, so much stronger than words, "True, I have trampled upon your constitution and your laws, and that too when your most sacred rights were concerned; but I have only adapted my course to your base natures. Dogs the more they are kicked and cuffed, the more they cringe—the more obedient they are." Such translated into words is the position of this man to-day. It is clear that he thinks we, as a people, are

"Pigeon-livered and lack gall To make oppression bitter."

THE TREMENDOUS physical constitution and energy of the Southern people, at least of the males, (says the Detroit Free Press.) whose good sense is not confined to its fun, is something unparalleled in history. That they spend a good portion of their nights in riding about and engaging in murder, arson, robbery and other crimes, is conceded by every Republican newspaper and preacher from every Republican stump. An ordinary race of men would, of course, require sleep and rest during the day time; but no sooner do these Southern banditti arrive home and take off their masks and put away their pistols than they begin the work of the day-time by raising cane, cotton and other products to a larger extent than before the war. Some of them, too, after a hard night's ride, their hands still covered with blood, go to work manufacturing the cotton which the other ku-klux have raised. They even send to the hated North for machinery. A Northern newspaper says that the Lewiston (Maine) Machine Company's works were never so busy as now. Looms de being made for mills in Georgia, North and South Carolina, and the shops are run at their fullest capacity to fill the orders. Hence we say that a people capable of manufacturing and raising cotton by day, and in the classic words of HORR, of Michigan, "hell" by night, are at once the most vigorous and the most industrious of any people on earth.

A COMMITTEE from Kansas is now at St. Louis soliciting aid for the starving and destitute in the northern part of that State. The lowest estimate places the number of people who are suffering at 25,000, and the cause of the affliction is a drought, which with a visitation from the green worm and chintz bug has ruined the wheat, corn and potato crops in a half-dozen counties. Gov. St. John has advised all the people in the drought-visited district to leave Kansas, if possible.

Ir the cotton crop of 1880 should reach 6,000,000 bales, as has been predicted, it will require 75,000 miles of hoop iron to tie it. There will be required 36, 000,000 of these bands, 11 feet long and weighing 1,200 to the ton. Their total weight will be 30,000 tons, and their cost about $3,000,000.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel groups the Democratic vote of the North and that of the South to show that the Democratic party North is larger than it is South. The Northern Democratic vote aggregates 2,670,685, while that of the South is only 1.613.982.

Political Prospects [Special to the Baltimore Sun, 31st.] WASHINGTON, August 31.—Senator Wallace and Whyte and Hon. Richard T. Merrick were all in town to-day. Senator Whyte and Mr. Merrick have both lately returned from viits to the North, and Senator Wallace has been devoting much attention to his own State of Pennsylvania. All three of these gentlemen are in the best of spirits over Democratic prospects. A leading Tammany politician told Senator Whyte that the question in New York was only as to the amount of the Democratic majority. Mr. Merrick saw Gen. Hancock very recently, and has had a letter from Mr. English. Both Gen. Hancock and Mr. English are entirely confident, and Mr. English says the Democrats of the country need not give themselves the least uneasiness as to Indiana. Representative Hurd, of Ohio, who is a clearheaded man, told Mr. Merrick he had the strongest hopes of the Democrats carrying that State. Senator Wallace still thinks the Democrats have an excellent chance to carry Pennsylvania, and as to the election of Haneock and a Democratic House of Representatives, he says there can be no doubt. Leading Republicans here profess the same confidence in regard to their prospects. Gen. Ketcham, of New York. ex-District Commissioner, and now a member of the House, who is an exceedingly shrewd politician, insists that the Republicans will get New York, and that they will carry Indiana in October without any trouble, and he says the same of Maine.

SANGUINE REPUBLICANS. The Republican campaign committee has figured up a majority for their party in the next House, so that everything is lovely, so far as calculations go, on both sides. There will be great disappointment

Ex-Gov. Paul O. He was colonel of the Twelfth United States infantry in the Mexican war, and distinguished himself at Molino del Rev and Chapultepec. In 1852 he was elected Governor of Louisians, under the new constitution, serving four years. He was a brigadier-general in the Confederate army.

NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.

[Correspondence of THE RALEIGH NEWS ]

NEW YORK, Sunday, August 29. EDITOR NEWS:—The sermon preached to me this morning was not spoken, but seen, and I trust, felt. It was more impressive than any that could proceed from living lips. Death was the preacher. I stood in his presence, gazing on the calm and sweet face, never to be seen again in this world, of a valued lady friend, for many years the wife, and for five years past the widow, of my friend James Bogle. who will probably be remembered by many in North and South Carolina, as well as here, as an artist, not less than an intelligent and high-toned Christian gentleman. She closed her life of fifty-eight years, of which the last was one of intense suffering, on Friday. As wife and mother she had faithfully performed her duties; had ong ago given herself to God through His Church, and hence calmly contemplated the end which she was well aware was at hand. Her face in death gave no sign of the pain she had endured in life—an assurnce, I humbly trust, that her immortal spirit s now where there is no more suffering, no more death. I hope your readers will pardon this slight tribute, and these sol-emn reflections, by one who has thus parted from one more friend, and knows that he must soon part from all.

Ben Butler has given another evidence in his speech at Boston of the truthfulness of his description of himself. People. said he, many years ago, "called me Beast spoons, thief, scoundrel, and all that, but obody ever called me a fool." If any one had ever done so, he would do so no onger, for his speech is a very powerful one, and on the right side this time. It was deemed so important that it was telegraphed entire to the papers here and appeared in them on the morning after its delivery. Ben Butler is not a fool, and may be a better man than he once was.

It is to be copyrighted in England, but cannot be in this country. It is said that McMillan & Co., London Publishers, have paid the expenses to the amount of a hundred thousand dollars, and will have the English copyright. Their branch house in this city will doubtless sell their copies till some publisher here shall pirate it, and that will no doubt soon be done.

[From the New York Times.] The House of Commons presented on Friday morning, as, indeed, it has often presented before, certain features which no other popular assembly could faithfully reproduce—the dawn of a Summer morning breaking in upon some 600 gentlemen who. night after night, are spending the weary hours when the rest of the world, except policemen, journalists, and thieves, are abed, in the unpaid service of their country, The tall, stalwart, bearded figure representing the head of the Government has been in his place, with a brief interval for dinner, since 4 o'clock the previous afternoon, and as the first beams of the sun reveal rows of sleepy members who wear the dissipated look which evening dress and spent white ties always give, is perhaps thinking, during the boredom of a wear some obstruction harangue, that the same rays are awakening herds of deer among the lovely glades of his ancestral park at Bolton Abbey, or gilding the vanes of his vet more splendid home of Chatsworth Yet this heir to millions and the grandest nomes in Christendom, a keen sportsman too, in the prime of a vigorous manhood gives up all his enjoyment to toil all day in a most laborious public office, and to sit all night and a good slice of the morning in a fetid, heated atmosphere. FORT BROWN, TEXAS, August 15. We have had such fearful excitement here for the last few days that I have not been able to write, and I expect, too, you will see accounts of it in the papers, and be a good deal fright-

Thursday morning, when we woke up it was storming some, and it kept getting worse every minute, kept up all day, and by 9 o'clock at night it was simply fearful. This continued till 9 a. m., when there was lull for a few minutes, and then it changed to the opposite direction.

IT WAS A CYCLONE, and I never want to see another. thought our house would certainly be blown down. The storm came from the north, and as our house faces in that direction we got the full force of it. The water was over our ankles in the hall, and rushing like a river, and pouring in from the roof, filling our bed-room, and from thence to the parlor below. The diningroom kept dry, till the wind changed to the south, and then we got it in there; though not quite so badly. Just then I heard some-thing burst through with a terrible noise, and thought it was the front door. I felt sure then the whole house would be blown down, but as soon as they could get the storm lantern lighted they found it was only the transom. With the assistance of one of the men they managed to haul it in. I did not close my eyes all night and was rushing around like distraction, first up stairs, then down, then out to the servants' rooms, where there was less noise. It kept up from early Thursday morning to 8 a. m. on Friday. The post is

A PERFECT WRECK. The artillery barracks are unroofed, houses down, parts of them scattered in every direction, and the quarters, of course like a ruin too. We expected every min-

In the next house the front door was blown down and the back door split in two, and all the windows broken out. Two doors below the house was laid even with the ground. The Commissary's, a large brick building, with iron roof, built for the Ordnance, went down, and all stores dreadfully damaged—barrels of flour burst open and flying in every direction. The Calvary stables blown down with the horses in them. Only one laundress's house standing out of more than twenty. The hospital unroofed and not a dry bed in it. Infantry likewise—in fact every building at the post. The Corral went down and killed four horses and several mules. Some of them are supposed to be in the river. The men on guard had to stick their bayonets in the ground and pull themselves along on their knees. It was so dark they could not see at all, for as fast as the lanterns were carried out the

A Substitute for a Wife.

ATTON. 8,500.

|New York Herald.] The breezy Captain Marryatt relates in one of his novels an incident illustrative alike of the wonderful force of habit and the facility of substitution, so to speak, in human nature. . It's awful to think that one's place in the world may be filled by a scrubbing brush, and yet the captain demonstrates the possibility of such a thing. A worthy old salt, so goes the chronicle, had been in the habit of sleeping with his hand on his wife's head. She wore her hair close cropped, it is narrated, vet to the weather-beaten hand the stubole cushion seemed of downy softness, such is the power of infatuation and perfect sympathy. The worthy tar all too soon became a widower, and for weeks. when he stretched out his hands in bed and found only the smooth pillow beside him he could not sleep. Long and deeply was he troubled, and the physicians tried in vain. Finally, he one night took the scrubbing brush to bed with him, placed it upside down on the pillow next him, reposed his hand upon it and nature's sweet restorer came swift on downy pinions to light upon his tear-sullied lids. Now, another widower, who states that he lives in New York, has written a letter to this office to state that he has recently had the extreme felicity of burying his wife, and that as he misses her well-dressed form in the house he intends, instead of getting an old maid for a companion, to purchase a dressmaker's frame and dress it up four or five times a year in the newest flounces and millinery wrinkles and so replace his loss. long as the bills from the dressmaker come in regularly," he writes, "I can still feel like a married man." From some subsequent allusions in this purported widower's letter the suspicion grows that he is not what he pretends to be, but is, in fact, a married man who has failed to subscribe of THE RALEIGH NEWS.] LILESVILLE, Aug. |30. EDITOR NEWS:-A gentleman of much experience and sagacity in politics, a "levelided" man, now resident in Washington City, writes me, and he writes truth fully, thus: "This city is, according to opinions formed from long observation and experience, the best and most reliable political barometer or indicator in the United States—as the 'whoop' goes here, so goes the election. Everybody, except Hayes' office-holders and the negroes, are for Han-cock. The merchants of the city have shut down on crediting office-ho are collecting all they can from them before the new exodus takes place."

And my observant friend further says Not long ago it was suicidal for a merchant, or tradesman, or hotel man here to advertise in a Democratic paper. Now, to my certain knowledge, since Hancock's nomination, the — and the —, and all the other papers of our faith have more applications for advertising than they can accommodate."

This, though apparently a small fact, means something. Those shrewd Washington men know "which side of their bread's buttered.'

There is a matter demanding the close attention of county and township executive committees, and that attention should be given at once-now. It's this: numbers of negro men are now attending the free schools of Anson, and I reasonably suppose of other counties, claiming to be under 18 years of age. Some of them voted at the last election. All such will claim the right to vote in November. A list of them should be at once obtained from the teachers. Does not this matter come within the purview of the State Executive Committee? My friend Coke's attention is called to it.

The Fountain of Youth. [From the New York Times 29th.]

The London Standard has hitherto exclusive information of two events which may be fairly described as of vital interest to those who can put two and two together and are as averse as most men are to shuffling off this mortal coil. The first is that Dr. Norris, of Birmingham, has so mastered the chemistry of the blood of man that he can manufacture it, say by the gallon or barrel. Now, blood without an organism is like savorless salt, but, given an organism, if only good new blood, could be supplied at will when the unaided powers of nature begin to fail, why might not the human machine go on forever? This is mere theory on our part, but the Standard's authority says it is a fact, and that it is shown to be so by another test of human endurance, beside which even Dr. Tanner's-apropos of which the story is told-"pales its ineffectual fire." strange thing has, it seems, been going on right among us, that is to say, "in a town in Louisiana," for no less and no more distant a period than the last five years. An old man of 90 is at once the subject of the prolonged experiment, and the stillliving proof of the theory that the decay of the tissues may be arrested, and the entire system may be rejuvenated by a perpetual application of the process of transfusion of blood. Upon this Mr. A., and in this "town of Louisiana," Dr. F., (it is to be regretted that the original narrative is not more precise in its statements,) has operated two or three times weekly, and now Mr. A.'s gait and color have wonderfully improved, the withered appearance of his flesh is nearly gone, and he declares that he feels as strong as half a century ago. In short, five years ago there seemed every reason why he should die, and now there seems to be none why he should not live as long as the supply of blood holds out, and that, since Dr. Norris's discovery, means forever. Here, then, is at last found the object of Ponce De Leon's fatal voyage. If, now, Dr. F. or Mr. A. living in "a town in Louisiana," would only confirm this remarkable story, we should be quite ready to agree that "reason stands awestruck at the probable success of science in eventually conquering "the last enemy that is to be destroyed."

FAUMERS' COLUMN.

Our State Agricultural Society.

We are glad to note the earnestness and ctivity with which the officers of this institution are preparing for its ensuing annual exhibition, and that the prospects for success are so encouraging. And it is still more satisfying to see that its importance is gradually growing in the esteem of our people, as is evidenced by its patronage, which is widening and expanding year after year.

Prejudices may exist, and complaints may have been made against its manage-ment, but whether they be well founded, it is as little our purpose as it is our incli-nation to discuss at this time. We would look at it in a broader view. We would not forget that human government is not perfect, and we would remember the sacrifices which have marked the devotion of a few of our patriotic citizens in fostering and sustaining it. And of these we speak with confidence and pride, for we happened to have occupied a position where they were constantly under our observation. We would therefore regard it as a State institution, and as such would look at its high mission, and its abundant capabilities for good. As a citizen of the State our whole political creed may be embodied in this brief and simple platform:

The advancement of our educational and material interests should be parumount to all other considerations of State

Whatever, in any measure, contributes to the promotion of these great interests should have our earnest support and en-couragement as a people. For upon their development depends entirely the future character of our State, and its position politically, socially and commercially.

We would therefore give our hearty support to the State Agricultural Society, and all kindred enterprises. Agriculture is, and of necessity must continue to be, for all time, the great overshadowing interest of our people. It is the broad foundation upon which rest all our other interests. It controls the votes and pays the taxes, and any and all agencies employed to improve it should receive the ready and willing sanction of not only the farmers of the State, but of all classes of our people. We are a nation of critics. We ordinarily have little charity towards those who assume the responsibility of inaugurating enterprises, however laudable, or however important to ourselves, especially if their endeavor is the least colored with a probability of failure. We were forcibly impressed with the spirit and good sense of a reply given by a prominent Edgecombe farmer, at the Annual Fair in 1877, to a discontented critic; said he: "Well sir, your remark may be true, but I don't feel that I have the right to criticise anything, for I brought nothing here to exhibit, and I feel that I ought to have done so." Substantial appreciation is shown of the great value of these organizations. the family. She is a good hen; though by miny of the most prosperous and prothousands of dollars to aid them. Kansas and Colorado especially have utilized them to great advantage in augmenting their aggregate population and wealth. In many of the States subordinate organizations exist in almost every county. The growth and progress of the State of Georgia may be justly and in no small measure ascribed to the efficiency and character of her Annual Fairs. And what has been done in those States may be easily done here. Our State Agricultural Department has justly recognized the State Fair as a valuable auxiliary to its work, and its support will doubtless be continued. Gratifytng as was the display made by the Department last year, it is to be hoped that it will be improved upon at each succeeding Fair. But this cannot be done without the voluntary aid of the farmers of the

And the views here given as to the relations existing between the people of the State and the State Fair apply with equal justice to the people of different sections and their respective local affairs. With our splendid crops, and the comparative easy condition of our people, all the Fairs this Fall in the State should be greatly improved. We would rejoice to see the visitors to all of them, where they have been numbered by hundreds, augmented to thousands. Cannot this be accomplished by our State Fair? With the facilities afforded by railroads reaching out in every direction, giving easy and rapid transit, and the readiness with which they give cheap rates of fare, why may we not have on the grounds an average of fifteen thousand visitors per day? Return tickets at cheap rates, to hold good for two weeks, and sold at the principal points on lines converging to this city, would doubtless add thousands to the crowd of visitors. If well and judiciously advertised along the lines running North, we are satisfied from correspondence with parties desiring to visit our State, that large numbers would be induced to come from the Northern States. We hope that our farmers, mechanics, artisans, ladies, manufacturers and all classes will give a more generous encouragement to our Fair than it has hitherto enjoyed, and that its splendid success this fall will establish it firmly in the esteem of our people.

PEAS FOR FALL PLANTING.

Can you tell me, if you know a variety of pea that may be sown in the fall with oats, and that will withstand the winter and come on after the oats are harvested and make a crop? I have been referred to you for information.

Winnsboro, S. C., Aug. 24, '80. Answer-We know of no variety of pea that will do this. The variety known as the Old Red Cow Pea, is the hardiest with which we are acquainted. We have known it to withstand the winter, when plowed in with oats in the fall, when the ground was well covered with grass vines, &c., and the winter was mild. There is also a black variety that is said to be very hardy, but we do not believe that any variety has yet been found, whose qualities would warrant the experiment.

durance against weather tests are required We know of but one variety in this country which it is claimed is free from the ravages of rust. This was imported at heavy cost four years ago by the Messr Miller and Mr. John Wadsworth, of Char lotte. It is a large amber wheat with heavy, stout stalk, and yields finely.

Through these four years it has stood the test perfectly on the model farm of Mr Wadsworth at Charlotte, and he is satisfied that it is rust proof. By the way, we would suggest to our farmer friends, wh may visit Charlotte to go out and take a stroll over this farm. They may then see what effect the "No Fence Law," intelligent fertilizing, and thorough tillage will accomplish. Especially would we commend its inspection to those of our people who believe that grass and grain farming will not pay anywhere in the cotton belt of an

HOW TO DRESS A SHEEP. Good mutton should constitute the chief meat diet on every farm, especially through out the summer season. But how few people know how to dress it. It is a fac the cannot be denied, that in the small country markets it is difficult to get mutton that can be relished. It is fat enough, it is clean enough; but that "wooly taste" of which almost every child has beard seems to pervade or permeate the whole careas And to avoid this, almost all our people in butchering a mutton, are scrupulon careful not to let the wool touch the flesh and their greatest care is to take the hide off as quick as possible. This is all well enough and should be done, but it does not meet the trouble. The "wooly taste" is caused by the gases of the intestines being absorbed by the flesh, and therefore the first thing to be done after the animal is dead is to remove rapidly and quickly the intestines and before taking off the hide. Suspend it by the hind legs, thrus the knife through the neck and back the wind-pipe and sever the arteries Death will rapidly ensue. Lay open the skin along the belly and legs quickly and strip it back so as to be out of the war and then disembowel it as quickly as no sible. Now remove the skin and with clean water wash it out thoroughly, and if cooked properly no unpleasant taste will be discovered. There is a broad differ ence between a properly and a bungling dressed mutton, as boarders throughout our whole State can testify. L. L. P.

On the 21st inst. the District Convention for Wilkes, Iredell and Alexander came off at Taylorsville and resulted in the selection of Dr. York and Thomas S true men, but in the selection of Dr. You the champion of Wilkes, we feel safe th the old and fire-tried county of Wilkes will again carry the Democratic banner through successfully. He has served his people in both branches of the Legislature and in no instance have the Republicans been able to bring a charge against him or show where he has ever voted away one cent of the people's money. Four years ago when the county governments were changed Doctor gave the county 55 good competent magistrates, he then serving as our Senator. RALEIGH AS A COTTON MARKET .ring the cotton year which closed yeserday, the receipts and sales of cotton at igh have run beyond those of any preous year by 5,000 bales, being for the ear 53,000 bales. This cotton was drawn from the counties of Wake, Johnston, Nash, Franklin, Chatham, Granville, Moore and Wilson, and a few bales came from Wayne and Orange.

The steady increase, year by year, of Raleigh's cotton figures shows that producers are not slow in finding out the best market for their produce and in bringing it for sale to that market. The price of cotton n Raleigh is always within ½ to ¾ of a cent.
If the price in New York, and as it costs cents to send cotton to New York and it there we are prepared to believe that we were told by a prominent cotton caler jesterday, that in some parts of the on just closed, New York could not cotton in Raleigh; it was all taken up Suropean account and shipped from orfolk to Liverpool. But it is not only prices that make Raleigh a good cotmarket. The cost of selling a bale of otton here is less than it is anywhere se, the only charges being a fixed comnission of half-a-dollar per bale and ayage and weighing. And then too, are in Raleigh regular sellers and regar buyers. Men who only buy and men only sell. This also is an advantge to the city as a market. The Raligh cotton-dealers as a rule do not specute, and to this may be attributed the fact that no man in the city who has made cotton his exclusive business has ever failed. There have been very few noticeable features in the market during the year just closed. The only flurry was late in October when cotton started up from the very bottom and went steadily day by day up to 13 cents. The season of 1881 is pening very well but is much earlier than ever before. It is usually the middle of September before the season is fairly pened, but it looks this year as if the agest receipts would be during Septem-

On motion of Mr. John Cayton, the Chairman and Secretary were added to the committee, making its number fifteen.

On motion of Samuel Merrill, the committee were requested to report to a meeting of the mechanics of the city, to be held at the office of the State Agricultural Society, on Wednesday night, September 8th next. That meeting to effect a full and permanent organization, will be an important one, and every mechanic, manufacturer and citizen of enterprise is cordially invited to be present.

NEW YORK CHARACTERS.

The Matrimonial Brokers

Marriage—Ladies and Gentlemen Desirous of being happily married will consult their interest by applying to the undersigned, who gives all his attention to this branch of business, and who has already been very successful in brunging together persons adapted to each other by similarity of taste, temperament and sympathy. Terms reasonable. All communications strictly confidential. EDWARD DE CREVILLE, Matrimonial Agency, 1267 Broadway.

The readers of THE NEWS are no doubt aware of the existence of stock brokers. ship brokers and cotton brokers, but the idea of matrimonial brokers possibly never entered their imagination. That they exist here the above advertisement attests It is the easiest thing in the world to get married in New York. You can proceed in the slow, orthodox way, with its accompaniments of labial exercise, chocolate caramels, moonlight excursions, etc., or choose the rapid transit method, which consists of going to a matrimonial broker's office, "paying your money and taking your choice," or as is frequently the case, your choice taking you.

One would hardly think that such advertisements could attract customers. The idea of seeking marriage before one has experienced the affection that leads to it seems unnatural to persons who regard the relation of the sexes sentimentally. But the majority of mortals here I mean men-are matter-of-fact, and look upon everything in a purely practical way. They marry as they buy a house or sell a horse, invest in real estate or go abroad. The reason they go unwedded is because they don't find time to look for a wife. If any one finds her for them and throws her in their way they take her as they would any piece of property that seems desirable.

MATRIMONIAL BROKKRAGE is merely match-making systematized. The brokers do for money what amateurs do for excitement, and from a passion for managing. They have an uncertain trade, and yet more business than would be supposed. They don't expect much custom from home or from cities generally. but look for it from the country people, to whom they send circulars soliciting patronage. Their mode of procedure is interesting. Peter Smith lives in Jones or Washington county, and comes to town. He has often read the above advertisement and it has put the idea of a wife into his head. He has a small farm, is 35 or 36 years of age, likes women, but is shyafraid of them indeed, and consequently he has never got along with them. "If I could only get some tellow to do the courting," Peter has said to himself, (forgetting the story of Paolo and Francesca), "I'd been a husband long ago." He goes to the broker and announces the object of his visit. The broker is always distrustful of strangers, fearing they are not sincere, but after a few minutes' talk he sees that PETER IS TOO UNSOPHISTICATED to be guilty of a ruse. He soon puts his customer at ease and says that he knows a number of elegant and accomplished ladies who will suit him exactly.

"Perhaps I don't know what an elegant and accomplished lady is," observes Peter, "but I'm afraid its not exactly the sort I want. I'd like a kind o' nice, good wife, that wouldn't put on too much style, and look down on a fellow because he wasn't quite as good as her."

"Certainly; you need a good, domestic woman who loves her own fireside and is bound up in her children."

"Well, if I had it my way," hesitatingly remarks Mr. Smith, "I'd rather she wouldn't have any children that wasn't "Precisely. I mean yours, my dear sir I wish to say, when she had made you the happy father of a beautiful offspring, that she would devote herself to the family, be an angel in her home, a presence of love and peace, filling it with sunshine, and all that sort of thing." "Oh, yes, that is it," responds Smith, caught by the cheap rhetoric of the

"I have a lady in my mind now. shall charge you $10 for this interview, and if we consummate the marriage you will, of course, pay more. Call day after to-morrow."

As soon as Smith is gone the broker takes a letter from a drawer and reads: "DEAR SIR:-I should be willing to accept "Dear Sir:—I should be willing to accept a husband who could come well-recommended; who could provide for me handsomely; who has good habits; was well educated; and was of a domestic turn. I have some reputation for beauty and accomplishment; am young, although no longer a silly girl, and would, I think, be an ornament to a well-regulated household.

Sincerely,

BESSIE MARRION."

The broker drops a line to Miss Marrion soliciting an interview. She comes, and is not what might be anticipated from her note. She is about 35, has a thin face, faded blue eyes, high cheek bones, is freckled, and anything but handsome and elegant. She talks rapidly and is intelligent, though not very delicate or sensitive. She has been a teacher and a seamstress, has had a hard struggle with life, and seeing the broker's advertisement one day was tempted to write him by way of experiment.

An interview is arranged for her and Smith in the private office. They meet, and are both disappointed.

"I would never have him," she thinks. "I would not marry her for anything," he says to himself.

After half an hour's conversation they find themselves mistaken. They rather like each other. He proves to be candid, upright, independent and good-heart-ed. She is amiable, affectionate and truthful. When they have been acquainted three days they believe they can get along together. Smith pays the broker $25, takes Bessie Marrion to his farm as his wife, and they have lived comfortably, rearing pumpkins and babies ever since.

The brokers are not men of very high principle. They are willing to make money in almost any way, and the marriages arranged by them rarely turn out well; but THAT HAPPENS SO FREQUENTLY under all circumstances that it may be unjust to the profession to make them responsible for it. In a number of divorce cases in the courts it has been shown that the couple seeking separation became acquainted through the matrimonial brokers, and I do not think this calling can ever have any legitimate success. The population of Kansas, according to the census, is about 1,000,000.

Fall Fashions.

[New York Herald, 30th.]
The rulers of fashion decree that this season costumes may contain as many colors and fabrics as can be blended harmoniously, each color or shade representing a different material. Many costumes will contain but a single color, but will be composed of several different materials. The eading colors will be the different shades of purple known as heliotrope, malvoise, amaranth, amethyst, &c., which vary in intensity and shade and run through the whole scale of purples and plums, from the tint of the lilac to a deep plum color. Dahlia is a dark red seen in the flower of that name, and one of the richest colors of the season. Matelot is the new sailor blue, and has a purplish tint. Alexan is a dark yellowish brown. Mikado is a deep blue green and may be classed as a new shade of peacock green. Florentine is a bronze green, and cypress a dark green much worn by the Bonapartists. The whole range of olive tints, from the yellow green of olive itself to the deepest shade f olive brown, will be much worn through the fall. Manse brown will also be worn.

These colors are seen in all the new goods. In this season's Oriental goods may be seen the beauty of color which has always given the Eastern nations the position of being the best colorists in the world. The patterns and designs of those nations have been utilized by the French manufacturers in such a manner as to give to each different key of color, whether it be the brightness of steel or the sombre shades of olive, the proper harmonious combinations, in which no single thread or figure predominates or is out of tone. FASHIONS IN MILLINERY.

The new shapes for fall and winter hats and bonnets show that the models of 1830 to 1840 have been followed. The old "poke" bonnet will be one of the leading styles this season. All the new bonnets except the close fitting "cottage" have flaring brims four or five inches deep, and all are large and have square, large crowns, with small capes at the back. Feather turbans of the impian, pheasant and other birds are of last season's shapes, with a wing on each side and the head resting flatly on the left side. A Succo hat of white beaver has for trimming a white dove and two long ostrich plumes and three tips of white. A suspended chain of gilt holds a small gilt pig. The shape of the hat was a poke on one side, with the brim turned up on the other, and covered with the bird and plumes. A cardinal plush large gypsy, the "Eugenie," had trimmings of olive green velvet flowers, shaded cardinal, and black ostrich tips, shirred plush face trim-mings and black lace strings. A mouse-colored baker shape hat of the natural nap is among the importations of a leading house. Ostrich plumes of a deeper shade are the only trimmings. A black plush poke shape was trimmed with black tips and large cut jet beads. Jet of all kinds will be extensively used in hat trimmings. Tinsel, gold braid and gold threaded materials will be seen in evening hats. Glass beetles, bugs and insects, some three or four inches long, are also used, in various col-large or small jet beads. The ribbons used for trimmings are very rich in color, design and texture. Sash ribbons are sometimes doubled for hat strings. The newest are the cashmere patterns at $2 a yard. The favorite trimmings will be feathers, though velvet and plush flowers will not be entirely discarded.

SHOES AND HOSIERY.

The reign of the high French heel is nearly over and is replaced by lower heels and broad toes, the "common sense" shoe being one of the most popular among the best customers at the first class houses The black cloth top shoe is most worn at present. A small bow finishes some of these at the centre of the foxing. The French heels and box toes are still somewhat used for evening wear, but on all other occasions lower heels are seen. The hosiery department has become one of great importance during the past four years in all dry goods establishments. A novelty in this line, which will certainly not become common, is the silk stocking with side insertions of medallions of point lace. They may be had at one house for $50 a pair. From this the prices range all the way down to $10 for silk hose, and at about this price may be had the Sarah Bernhardt, of black and old gold.

Politics in Maine.

There was a mass-meeting at Portland, Me., a few nights ago, and the coming man made a speech to the Hancock boys Among those present was a friend of the coming man. Much to the surprise of the speaker, as soon as he got under way the friend began to be disagreeable. When the coming man went on to say how much he loved to serve the people the friend said in a loud voice: "That's a darned lie, and you know it." The coming man did not care to have a row, and endeavored to proceed quietly, but the friend kept on making such remarks as: "What was your name before you came to Maine?" ain't fit to be elected dog-pelter, and you

The Hamilton Murder.

CHICAGO, August 31.-John Hamilton was murdered to-day by his nephew. The following particulars are given: "Hamilton was 76 years old and Wm. H. McKenney his assailant is but 18. McKenney's father is wealthy and resides in Brooklyn. The boy wanted to become a far-mer and his father brought him West to spend the summer at his uncle's. He remained there until a few weeks ago when he became dissatisfied and went to a neighboring village to work in a mill. On his set-tlement with Mr. Hamilton's son eighteen dollars remained due him, and procuring a livery rig last evening he drove over to the farm. Young Hamilton not being at home, he demanded the money of his uncle, who told him that his son would settle as soon as the grain was threshed. This did not satisfy McKenny, who became abusive and threatened to attach the wheat. Hot words followed; Hamilton ordered Mc Kenny out of the house and attempted to put him out, whereupon McKenny drew a revolver and fired two shots, the second passing through Hamilton's heart, causing his death in a few moments. McKenny gave himself up to an officer and is now n jail." New Jersey Politics.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 31.—An unust ally large number of people are here to attend the Democratic State Convention which meets to-morrow to nominate candidates for Governor and Presidential Electors. GILDERSLEEVE'S

LATIN SERIES.

B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph. D., Gottingen, LL, D., Professor of Greek in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

Rarely have text-books been greefed with so large a measure of favor and hearty uppreciation, as these books by Professor Gildersleeve have received from the best scholastic and educational minds of the country. The author, now of national reputation as a scholar, has had very complete preparation for such a work. After being graduated at Princeton, he studied for several years in the Universities of Gerfor several years in the Universities of Germany, where he received his Ph.D., etc., with highest honors. His subsequent life has been devoted to teaching and linguistic study. When the new and righly endowed Johns Hopkins University sought for a fit man for its chair of Greek, the appointment was conferred on Prof. Gildersleeye, after wide conference, and without his solicitation or effort, and his work as senior professor of the University attracts marked attention. He is also the presiding officer of the American Philogical Association.

Prof. Gildersleeve's Latin books are the product of this order of ability and educational training. Embodying the best resultant freent studies in Latin philology, they are simple, clear and practical in method.

THE LATIN PRIMER.

Forms; Minimum of Syntax; Early Contact with the Language in Mass."

A teacher in one of the Teading High Schools of the country, who conducted a large class through this book, writes;

"We have just finished the Primer, having spent upon it thirty-four weeks; and I have been trying to realize my pupils' attitude towards the study, as compared with that of other classes I have known. They have the use of a larger vocabulary; their text-book line secured for them a careful drill in the normal terminations; they have been brought more into confor them a careful drill in the normal termina-tions; they have been brought more into con-tact with the language in the concrete, and have, therefore, a more vivid interest in it; and they have been less perplexed by exceptional forms and difficult construction.

"The book is thoroughly alive, and will per-force make its students so."

THE LATIN GRAMMAR s marked by its genuine scholarship, clear and logical arrangement of material, and a typography that pleasantly aids the eye. Its presentation of forms is plain and convenient; its definitions, rules and other statements are brief and pointed; and its translations of illustrative examples are most striking models for students.

THE LATIN READER

has Fables and Stories; "De Gestis Alexandri," a most interesting narrative, chiefly from Cur-tius; one book of Casar's "De Bello Gallico," treated in a manner to make it an admirable drill in Latin Syntax; also notes and Refer-ences to the Grammar, and a Vocabulary.
